Letter from the Executive Director

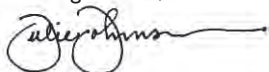

Dear Hitchcock Friends,

We are pleased to share with you our accomplishments for fiscal years 2012 and 2013, including our historic 50th Anniversary year. With your generosity, we were able to help thousands of people from a diverse range of communities and perspectives gain new understanding of and greater connection to the natural world.

We could not accomplish all that we have without you. Our deep base of support through gifts, grants, sponsors, members, partners, and volunteers has made the Hitchcock Center what it is today—a nationally recognized leader in the field of environmental education.

We pay tribute to all of you in the pages of this report. Thank you for keeping Hitchcock strong and for recognizing the importance of environmental education.

With gratitude,

Julie Johnson
Executive Director

DEFINING ENVIRONMENTAL LITERACY

An environmentally literate person understands:

- Our daily choices affect our environment;
- How our choices can help or harm our environment;
- What we need to do—individually or as part of a community—to keep our environment healthy and sustain its resources, so that people enjoy a good quality of life for themselves and their children.

Our Path to Environmental Literacy

Our environmental education programs help teachers and their students, children and their families, and adults and their communities understand the complex ecological concepts, principles, and systems that are essential to a healthy planet and our quality of life. Our major program areas include: Children, Youth & Family, K–12 School, Professional Development, Adult, and Intern & Leadership Training Programs.

Our Children, Youth and Family Programs ...

inspire young people and their families through hands-on environmental education experiences embedded in the outdoors.

Program Highlights

NEW YOUTH BIRDING COURSE ENGAGES YOUNG BIRDERS

Thanks to expert local birder and Board member Dan Ziomek, the Hitchcock Center piloted a new youth birding course in Spring, 2013. Dan led eight young students ranging in age from 8 to 12 in the early hours of the morning over a five-week period to hone their skills in bird identification and behavior. We are extremely thankful for Dan's dedication and interest in developing the next generation of birding enthusiasts who can serve as future experts working on behalf of our feathered friends.

FACING CLIMATE CHANGE WITH HOPE

Climate activist Reverend Margaret Bullitt-Jonas led an inspirational program for 16 people on May 30, 2013 aimed at instilling hope, not despair, during a time of unprecedented ecological crisis. This program is one of a series of programs that the Hitchcock Center is building upon to help people develop a "framework of being" that allows them be effective healers, leaders and change agents filled with compassion, creative energy, scientific understanding, and spiritual strength to champion equitable, healthy, sustainable, and peaceful solutions to climate change.

lifelong learning

CENTER FOR TALENTED YOUTH PARTNERS WITH HITCHCOCK CENTER

The Johns Hopkins Center for Talented Youth program, which identifies and develops the talents of advanced K-12 learners, brought over 50 gifted students from around the Northeast to the Hitchcock Center for an unprecedented two years in a row for workshops in geology, birds of prey, and pond ecology.

community engagement

NEW STEM (SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, ENGINEERING, MATHEMATICS) LEARNING OPPORTUNITIES

Thanks to a multi-year National Science Foundation grant, Hitchcock Education Director Colleen Kelley partnered with the UMass Amherst School of Education to work with 20 master teacher fellows and 20 teacher fellows in Greenfield, Holyoke, Springfield and Mahar school districts. Through teacher summer training institutes, in-class mentoring, afterschool activities, and curriculum development, Colleen assisted teachers with the integration and implementation of new inquiry-based and culturally responsive Science Technology Engineering and Math learning opportunities that engaged over 950 students in grades 6–12.

Special thanks goes to Dr. Kathleen Davis, Associate Professor, Department of Teacher Education & Curriculum Studies, for her leadership and commitment to excellence in science and environmental education and community partnership development.

MOUNTAIN LIONS, MAMMALS AND MORE

The Hitchcock Center was proud to partner with Mass Audubon's Arcadia Sanctuary to bring natural history and tracking expert Sue Morse to the Valley over a two-day period on February 22–23, 2013. This special event was sold out with over 44 people immersed in the natural world and learning more about some of our most fascinating and beloved mammals including cougar, porcupines, fishers, bear, moose, and more.

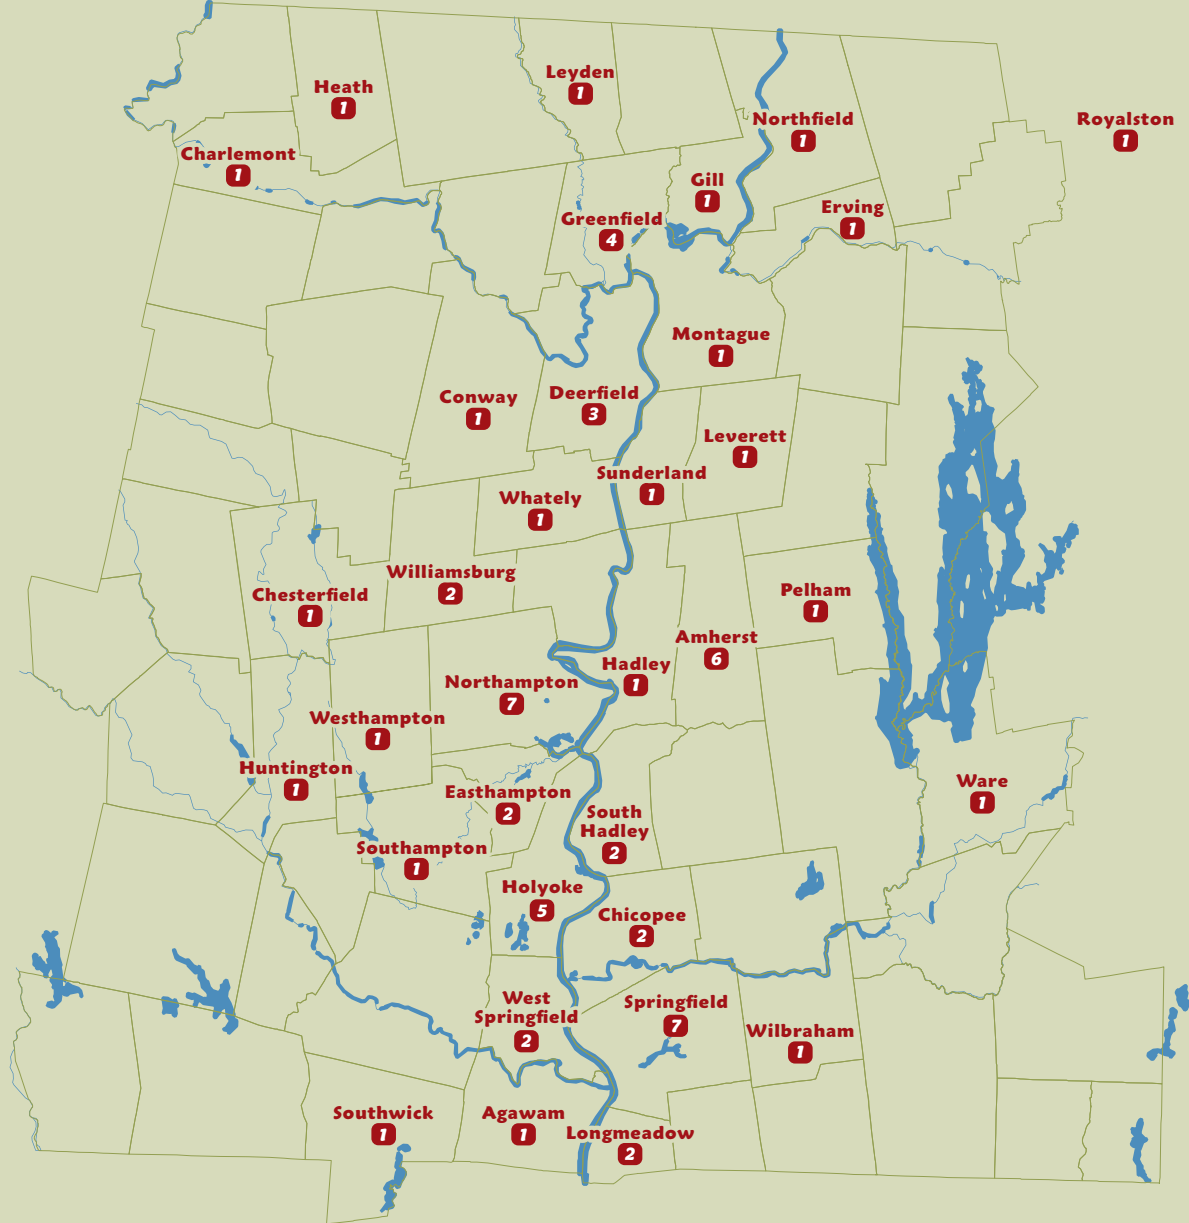

NEW NATIONALLY RECOGNIZED SCIENCE CURRICULUM

A grant award from the New England Environmental Education Alliance and the Environmental Protection Agency supported a team of Hitchcock educators to develop three comprehensive classroom-ready curriculum units using the Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS). The NGSS are based on the latest research by the National Research Council, the National Science Teachers Association, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science on the most effective K–12 science learning approaches. This curriculum will now be piloted, published, and implemented in classrooms throughout the region and include: The Pond Ecosystem (grade 3), Energy is Electrifying! (grade 4), and The Hydrosphere, Water, and How We Use It (grade 5).

Biothon

The Hitchcock Center's Biothon happens each year in May when bird migration is at its peak and when many plants are in leaf and bloom. It's when we can expect to see the greatest biodiversity. Teams choose where and when to go out for up to a 24-hour period on Biothon weekend and count species—birds, plants, mammals, reptiles and amphibians, insects, or everything! Biothon is one of Hitchcock's two major fundraising events of the year. Thank you to all of the team "captains" who have made Biothon a resounding success:

FY12 & FY13 Green Building Project in Review

The Hitchcock Center has been working for five years in extensive planning and preparation toward its future, initiating a new green building project calling for a building that will not only serve as a highly visible model of ecological design, but also will teach people of all ages the science of ecology and the practice of sustainability.

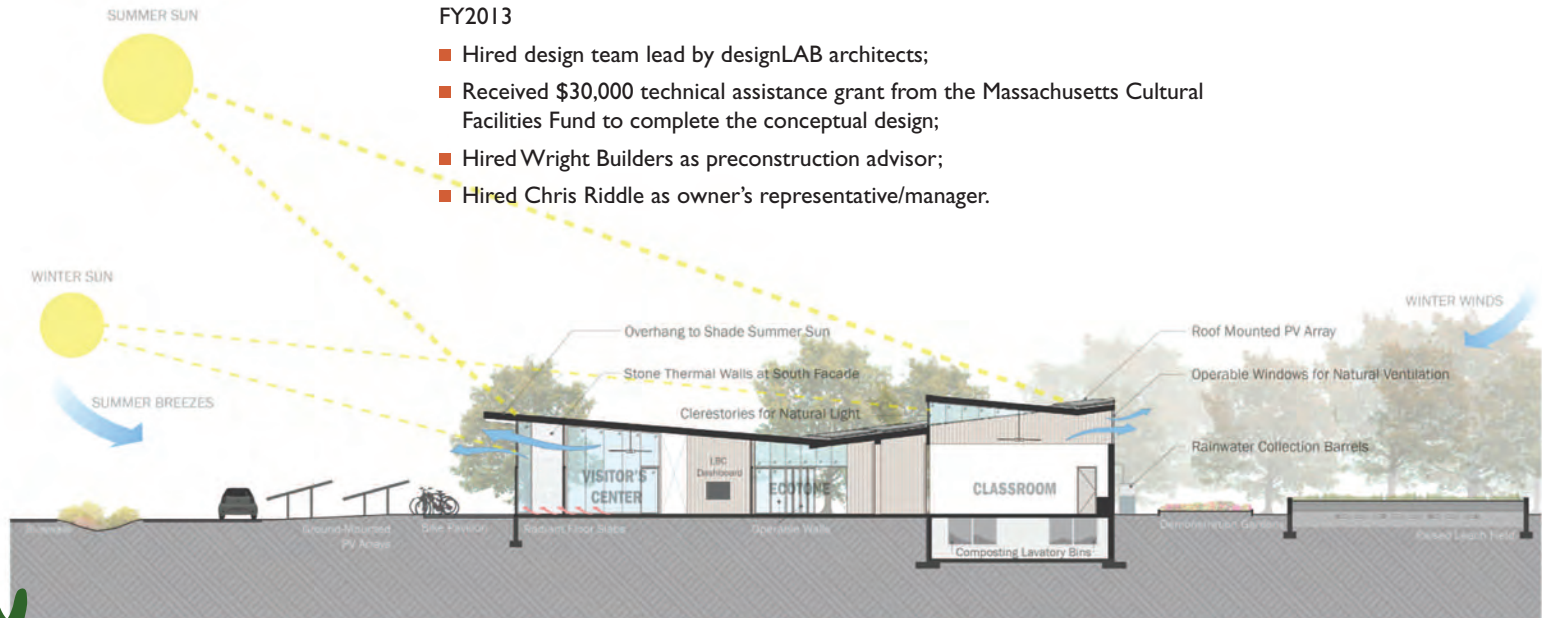

Some milestone achievements include:

FY2012

- Secured new site and partnership with Hampshire College;
- Completed engineering and geotechnical studies of the site;
- Hired fundraising advisor Ellen Leuchs of KirschLeuchs Consulting to plan for a future capital campaign.

FY2013

- Hired design team lead by designLAB architects;
- Received $30,000 technical assistance grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Facilities Fund to complete the conceptual design;
- Hired Wright Builders as preconstruction advisor;
- Hired Chris Riddle as owner's representative/manager.

Honoring Dubie's Legacy

The Hitchcock Center for the Environment was founded in 1962 by Ethel Dubois (1906–1987), a retired guidance counselor. Ethel was deeply inspired by the works of Rachel Carson (1907–1964) who is recognized as the founder of the contemporary environmental movement. She bought a farm in Leverett and, with the support of a handful of dedicated volunteers, provided summer camp and nature programs for low-income children living primarily in Holyoke and Springfield. Her goal was to provide these children with opportunities otherwise not available to them: to experience the natural world and to develop a sense of wonder about it.

Initially known as the “Long Plain Nature Center,” the Center’s service region rapidly grew in the ‘60s and ‘70s to include new science and nature programs for schools and communities throughout Hampshire, Hampden and Franklin Counties. It soon outgrew its farm location and in 1976, with the generous support of the town of Amherst, the Center relocated to its present location at the Larch Hill Conservation Area in Amherst.

At about the same time, the Center changed its name to the Hitchcock Center for the Environment in honor of Edward & Orra Hitchcock: Edward, the first Massachusetts state geologist and third president of Amherst College, and Orra, a noted botanical illustrator. Today, the Center remains true to Dubie’s core mission of fostering a greater awareness and understanding of our environment and developing environmentally literate citizens.

Our Supporters

The Hitchcock Center is grateful for the support of the following individuals, businesses and organizations during our fiscal years July 1, 2011–June 30, 2013. Regular annual support ensures that our educational mission and vision remains responsive to the needs of our community.

Valley Gives (FY13)

Valley Gives is a one-of-a-kind celebration of generosity in western Massachusetts. In a 24-hour period on December 12, hundreds of local nonprofit organizations rally to raise funds for their missions, while being eligible for bonus prizes throughout the event. The top three organizations in most dollars raised and most unique number of donors also win generous prizes. During Valley Gives 2012 (FY13), our first year of participating in this event, the Hitchcock Center raised $7,771 from 84 donors to support our award-winning environmental education programming. Thank you!
